Appendix: 1-Minute Video Story Script Template 🎬

Now that you understand the theory, here's a simple template to help you write your own one-minute video script. This template breaks down the script into sections with their purpose. You can use it as a fill-in-the-blanks guide. (In your final script or PDF, you might color-code each section for clarity – for example, highlight the Hook in green, the Conflict in red, and the Resolution in blue – to easily see the parts.)

Feel free to adjust the timing and wording to fit your specific story, but remember to keep it short and punchy!

🔰 HOOK (First 3-5 seconds) – Goal: Grab the viewer's attention immediately.
What to do: Start with a bang. Introduce a scenario, question, or statement that demands attention. This line or visual should make the viewer want to know more.
Example Hook: "I woke up to 100 missed calls – and they were all from an unknown number." (Instantly raises curiosity.)

🖊️ Your Hook: _____

🌱 SETUP (The Beginning, ~5-15 seconds) – Goal: Set the scene and introduce the character or context, very briefly.
What to do: Give just enough background so viewers understand the situation. Who is involved? Where or when is this happening? What is the normal world before things get interesting? (Keep it to one or two sentences or shots.)
Example Setup: "It was my first day at a new job, and I was already running late." (We know who, where, and sense something might go wrong.)

🖊️ Your Setup (Optional if jumping straight to conflict): _____

⚡ CONFLICT or "BUT…" (The Middle, ~15-40 seconds) – Goal: Present the problem, obstacle, or twist – the main drama of the story.
What to do: Explain what goes wrong or what challenge arises. Use the "But…" technique here: Everything was fine, but then [problem]. This section can include a quick sequence of events showing attempts to solve the problem or the situation escalating. Ensure there's a clear challenge that needs resolution.
Example Conflict: "But on my way, my car got a flat tire. I tried calling a taxi, but none were available. Therefore, I started running with five minutes left!" (We see the problem and the urgency.)perell.comperell.com

🖊️ Your Conflict: _____
(What obstacle or challenge does the character face? What's at stake? Use "but"/"therefore" if applicable.)

🌟 CLIMAX or KEY MOMENT (Still Middle, ~40-50 seconds) – Goal: Highlight the most intense or important moment.
What to do: This is where the tension is highest. It might be the moment of truth, a decision point, or a turning point. Often, it's implied within the conflict/resolution, but if your story has a distinct climax, describe it.

Example Climax: "Sweating and out of breath, I reached the office door… just as the clock hit 9:00." (The critical moment – did they make it in time?)

🖊️ Your Climax (Optional if it blends with conflict/resolution): _____

✅ RESOLUTION or "THEREFORE…" (The End, ~50-60 seconds) – Goal: Show how the story ends and wrap it up.
What to do: Explain the outcome. How is the conflict resolved (or not resolved)? Use the "Therefore…" part of the technique: We had a problem, therefore this happened. This is where you deliver the payoff to the viewer – maybe a solution, a surprise twist, or a lesson learned.
Example Resolution: "Therefore, I burst into the meeting just in time – only to realize everyone else was late because they got the date wrong. I wasn't late; I was early!" (The problem resolves, with an ironic twist.)

🖊️ Your Resolution: _____
(How does it end? Did the character succeed, fail, or learn something?)

🎉 CLOSING / TAKEAWAY (Last couple of seconds) – Goal: Leave the viewer with a final thought, feeling, or call-to-action.
What to do: Finish with a strong closing line or visual. This could be a quick moral of the story, a witty punchline, or a call-to-action (like asking a question or inviting the viewer to do something). Even a brief concluding sentence can give a sense of completion.
Example Closing: "Always remember: even bad luck can turn into good luck in the end. 🤗" followed by "(Let me know if you've ever had a day like this!)" as on-screen text.

🖊️ Your Closing/CTA: _____
(What final message or question will you leave the audience with?)

How to use this template: Write out each part for your story. Keep your sentences short and impactful. Once you fill in the blanks, read it aloud while timing yourself – aim for around 150 words total for a 1-minute spoken script (this can vary, but it's a good ballpark). If it's too long, trim some details or simplify sentences. If it's too short, you can add a tiny bit of detail or dramatic pause, but remember brevity is key.

After writing, imagine the visuals that go with each part. Jot down notes like "(Shot of flat tire on car)" or "(Add suspenseful music here)" next to the script. This will help when you actually film or edit the video. Planning both the script and the visuals together will make the storytelling more cohesive.

Finally, don't worry if your first draft isn't perfect. One-minute storytelling is an art that improves with practice. Use this template to draft, then refine, and soon you won't even need the template – the structure will come naturally.
