The Foundation That Makes Everything Else Work

Most people mess up Facebook before they even post their first video.

They create a brand new account, skip the setup steps, and wonder why they're stuck at 47 views for months.

The way you set up your Facebook account determines whether you'll be fighting the algorithm or working with it.

Get this right and everything else becomes easier. Get it wrong and you'll be grinding uphill forever.

This lesson covers exactly how to set up your account for maximum reach and quality leads.

Aged Accounts: The Cheat Code

Here's something nobody tells beginners:

A brand new Facebook account is at a massive disadvantage.

Facebook is paranoid about bots and spam.

When you create a fresh account and immediately start posting content, Facebook gets suspicious. It throttles your reach.

It might even ban you or force you through identity verification.

The solution is to use an aged account.

An aged account is simply a Facebook account that's been around for a while. At minimum, 3 months old.

When you post from an aged account, Facebook thinks "okay, this is a real person who's been on the platform. Let's give their content a fair shot."

How to get an aged account:

The easiest way? Ask someone you know.

Your mom probably has a Facebook account she barely uses. Your cousin. Your uncle. Your grandma.

These accounts have been sitting there for years.

The person logs in maybe once a month to see birthday notifications.

They're not using it for anything.

Ask if you can use it. Explain you're starting a content project.

Most people will say yes because they don't care about Facebook anyway.

This is how many successful creators got their first primed account. Not by buying anything. Not by using sketchy services. Just by asking a family member.

What if you can't get one from someone you know?

You can buy aged accounts, on z2u.com but this gets into gray area territory.

The quality varies wildly. Some work great. Some get banned immediately. I

If you go this route, do your research and understand the risks.

The family/friend route is cleaner and more reliable.

Personal Accounts vs Pages

Here's where people get confused.

Facebook has two ways to post content:

1. Personal Profile (like a regular user account)
2. Pages (professional/business accounts)

You want to use Pages.

Personal profiles can work, but they're limited. You can't access professional features. You can't see detailed analytics. You can't use country restrictions to control who sees your content.

Pages give you everything you need:

- Professional dashboard with real analytics
- Country and age restrictions for targeting
- Business features for monetization
- The ability to create multiple pages under one personal account

The setup structure looks like this:

Your aged personal account (the foundation)
└── Page 1: Your AI Influencer brand
└── Page 2: Could be another brand later
└── Page 3: And another if you want

One strong personal account can support multiple pages. Each page can be a different AI influencer or different niche if you want to expand later.

Creating Your Page Step by Step

Here's exactly how to create your page:

Step 1: Go to the menu button on Facebook

On mobile, it's the three lines in the bottom right. On desktop, it's similar navigation.

Step 2: Find "Pages" and tap it

You'll see an option to view your pages or create a new one.

Step 3: Press "Create New Page"

Facebook will start walking you through the setup.

Step 4: Enter your page name

This should be your AI influencer's brand name. Keep it clean and memorable. This is what people will see when they find your content.

Step 5: Choose your category

When it asks if you're a creator or professional account, choose professional. Then for category, select something like "Creator" or whatever fits closest to your niche.

Step 6: Add your profile picture

Use your AI influencer's image. The same one you use on other platforms. Consistency matters for brand recognition.

Step 7: Add your cover photo

This is the banner image at the top of your page. Make it look professional. It can be a simple branded image or something that represents your niche.

Page Health: The Step Most People Skip

This is crucial and almost everyone ignores it.

Facebook has something called "Page Health."

It's essentially a score that measures how complete and trustworthy your page looks.

When you're setting up your page, Facebook will prompt you to add:

- Bio/description
- Website URL
- Contact email
- Phone number
- Address
- Business hours

Fill out everything.

I don't care if you don't have a "real" business address. Use something. A PO box. A general location.

Something that looks legitimate.

The email doesn't need to be your personal one. Create a separate email for your influencer.

The phone number can be a Google Voice number or similar.

Why does this matter?

Facebook shows you a health bar during setup. It can be red, orange, or green.

Red = Your page looks sketchy. Facebook won't trust it.

Orange = Getting there but still incomplete.

Green = Fully filled out. Facebook sees you as legitimate.

You want that bar maxed out to green.

Pages with poor health get throttled. Facebook assumes you're a bot or spam account. Your content goes nowhere.

Pages with good health get the benefit of the doubt. Facebook pushes your content because you look like a real, legitimate creator.

This takes five extra minutes during setup.

Those five minutes can be the difference between 100 views and 100,000 views over the lifetime of your account.

Branding Your Page

Your Facebook page needs to look like a real brand, not a half-finished project someone abandoned.

Profile Picture: Your AI influencer's image. High quality. Recognizable. Same as your other platforms.

Cover Photo: Something branded. Could be your AI influencer in a different pose. Could be a simple graphic with your niche tagline. Make it look intentional.

Bio/About Section: Clear description of what your page is about.

Example for a spiritual AI influencer: "Daily wisdom for peace, clarity, and purpose. Follow for gentle reminders that you're exactly where you need to be."

Website Link: Your link tree, community link, or main website. This is where you'll send people who want to go deeper.

Call to Action Button: Facebook lets you add a button to your page (like "Sign Up" or "Learn More"). Set this up to point to your community or lead magnet/funnel.

Every element should reinforce that this is a legitimate, active, valuable page to follow.

The "Recommend to Facebook" Trap

If you're connecting your Instagram to Facebook (which we'll cover in the next lesson), there's a setting you need to know about.

It's called "Recommend to Facebook."

Turn this OFF.

Here's what happens when it's on:

Your video gets pushed to Facebook users, but when they tap your profile to learn more or follow you, they see... nothing. A blank screen. They can't see your bio. They can't see your link. They can't interact with your page.

They can only like the video. That's it.

This is why some accounts get massive view counts but zero engagement. Thousands of likes, but the comment section is dead.

No follows. No community growth. No conversions.

The views are essentially fake. They look good but they're worthless for actually building anything.

When you connect Instagram to Facebook properly (not through "Recommend to Facebook"), people can actually:

- See your full profile
- Read your bio
- Click your links
- Follow your page
- Comment and interact

Those are the views that matter. Not vanity numbers that lead nowhere.

Country Restrictions for Quality Leads

Here's a feature that can transform your results.

In your page settings, under the professional dashboard, you can restrict which countries can see your content.

Why would you want to limit your reach?

Because not all views are equal.

If your AI influencer's community is priced in USD and targets English speakers, views from India or Brazil or Indonesia don't help you. Those viewers aren't going to join a $50/month English-language community. They're not your audience.

But Facebook's algorithm doesn't know this by default. It just pushes content wherever it gets engagement. And often, that means countries with huge populations but low purchasing power.

Country restrictions solve this.

You can tell Facebook: "Only show my content to people in the US, Canada, UK, and Australia."

Now every view you get is from someone who could actually become a paying community member.

On Instagram, this feature exists but it has an age restriction (25+) that limits its usefulness.

On Facebook, there's no such limitation. You get full control.

The tradeoff:

Your view counts will be lower. Maybe significantly lower at first.

But those views will be 10x more valuable. A video with 5,000 views from US adults will generate more signups than a video with 50,000 views from mixed global traffic.

Quality over quantity. Always.

Signs of a Healthy Account

Once you're posting, here's how to know if your account is on the right track:

Good signs:

- Views consistently above 1,000 per video
- Comments are from people in your target countries
- Engagement feels real (actual questions, actual responses)
- View counts are growing over time, even slowly

Warning signs:

- 90% of your audience is from countries you're not targeting
- Tons of likes but zero comments (might have Recommend to Facebook on)
- Views are completely random with no consistency

If you're seeing warning signs after 3 weeks of consistent posting, it might be time to evaluate your account quality or start fresh with a better foundation.

Quick Setup Checklist

Before you post anything, make sure:

- [ ] You're using an aged account (3+ months old minimum)
- [ ] You've created a Page under that account
- [ ] Page is set to Professional
- [ ] Category is relevant (Entertainment Website or similar)
- [ ] Profile picture is your AI influencer's image
- [ ] Cover photo is branded and professional
- [ ] Bio clearly explains what your page is about
- [ ] Website link is added
- [ ] Contact email is filled in
- [ ] Phone number is added (Google Voice or similar works)
- [ ] Address/location is filled in
- [ ] Page health bar is green (maxed out)
- [ ] "Recommend to Facebook" is OFF (if connecting to Instagram)
- [ ] Country restrictions are set (optional to do)

This takes 20-30 minutes to do right. Don't skip it.

The people who rush through setup and start posting immediately are the same people posting "why won't Facebook show my content to anyone" three months later.

Build the foundation correctly. Then start building on top of it.

What's Next

Your account is set up. Your page looks professional. Your health bar is green.

Now it's time to decide how you're going to post.

In the next lesson, we'll cover the Instagram-Facebook connection: whether to cross-post, how to do it properly, and when posting directly to Facebook makes more sense.

Let's keep building.
