The Priming Myth

There is no switch to flip, no secret method, and you are almost certainly not shadowbanned. What "priming" actually is, and why people keep looking for a shortcut that does not exist.

MODULE 2.2

The Priming Myth

This one deserves its own space because beginners obsess over it. People want the secret to "priming" an account, some sequence of settings or actions that unlocks the algorithm.

MYTH

"There is a secret sauce to priming an account. Some sequence of settings, swipes, or actions that unlocks the algorithm."

TRUTH | There is no secret sauce. A primed account is simply an account that consistently gets good views, meaning 10K or more, and it gets there for one reason: it posts good content consistently, every day. That is the whole mechanism.

"The work is the priming."

Stop looking for a switch and start posting good content daily, because that is the only thing that produces a primed account.

The same goes for any "secret method" you hear about. There is no hidden trick being withheld from you. The people who win are doing the obvious things well and repeatedly. That is the secret, and it is not much of one.

WHY PEOPLE LOOK FOR THE SHORTCUT

The hunt for a "secret method" is comforting because it means the reason things are not working is something you have not unlocked yet, instead of something you have to actually do every day. The truth is less exciting: the work is the unlock. Daily, sharp, decent content. That is it.

The shadowban add-on

One quick add-on, because it sits right next to the priming myth. You are almost certainly not "shadowbanned." Beginners reach for the shadowban explanation whenever views drop, because it feels better than the real answer.

MYTH

"My views dropped, so I must be shadowbanned."

TRUTH | Real shadowbans are rare. Nine times out of ten, when an account is "not getting views," it is a content issue: the videos are not hitting hard enough, the hook is weak, the concept is tired, the angle is wrong. The algorithm is not silently punishing you. It is just not pushing the content because the content is not earning the push. The fix is almost always sharper content, not a workaround for an imaginary ban.
