imarketing.courses

CONTENTSYSTEM.AI

MODULE 5.1

The Burner Account Method

Where 90 to 95% of your product research happens. A research feed trained to show you products that are working right now.

imarketing.courses

MODULE 5.1

The Burner Account Method

Before you can market anything, you need a reliable way to find products worth marketing. The most common tool for this is the burner account, and you will do something like 90 to 95% of your product research here.

A burner account is a fresh social media account, one on TikTok and one on Instagram, that exists for one purpose: to train the algorithm to constantly show you products that are being marketed in this space. It is not an account you post from. It is a research feed. You scroll it, and that is how you find new products.

SETUP NOTE IF YOU ARE OUTSIDE THE US

You want your burner to show you US products, because that is where the money is. Use a good VPN set to the US. You do not need a foreign SIM card, that is a myth. What does matter is VPN quality, because cheap ones disconnect for split seconds over and over. If TikTok sees your location flickering between, say, Canada and the US every second, it can read you as a bot. Get a VPN that holds a stable connection. The full iPhone + dedicated-IP setup protocol is in the Bonus Resources section at the end of the course.

How to build it

1

Make a brand new account

Use a new email. Do not overthink this. Any email provider works and the account does not need to be anything special.

2

Search proven phrases that pull up active drop shipping content

These five phrases work well. They are active hooks high-performing videos are using right now, so searching them lands you on the good side of the burner, looking at videos that are actually working.

imarketing.courses

THE FIVE SEARCH PHRASES

“ The perfect gift for a ”

“ Don't show this to a ”

“ 3 2 1 let's see how it comes out ”

“ Amazon finds ”

“ Tiktokmademebuyit ”

3

Train the feed by engaging hard

As you scroll the search results, engage as hard as you can. Rewatch every video once or twice, like every video, comment on every video, and save them if you want. Do that for a solid five to fifteen minutes. Then go back to your main feed and refresh it. It should start filling up with drop shipping products. Keep engaging with everything relevant that comes up.

4

Repeat on Instagram

Same setup so you have one burner on each platform. Within fifteen minutes or so, you have a working burner.

The logic is the same logic behind any feed. If you spend your time engaging with one topic, the algorithm decides that is what you want and serves you more of it. Someone who constantly likes basketball content gets a feed full of basketball. You are doing the same thing, except the topic is drop shipping product videos.

Your daily routine

From then on, your daily job is to scroll these accounts and watch for products. A practical routine is about two hours a day split into sessions, roughly thirty minutes each per platform, with a break of a couple hours before another round.

There is a reason to break it into short sessions instead of scrolling one platform for hours. If you stay on a single platform too long, it starts recycling the same products at you. Short, spaced sessions keep fresh products flowing in.

imarketing.courses

ADVANCED: TWO PHONES, TWO COASTS

Use two phones. Put a VPN targeted to the East Coast on one and the West Coast on the other, so one feed is pinned to New York and the other to LA. Two completely different burner feeds, and you stop rinsing a single one. It feels like scrolling the burner on someone else's phone and seeing products you would not have seen otherwise.

When the same products keep showing up

This is the single biggest frustration beginners hit on the burner, and they panic about it. You scroll for a day or two, see the same products on repeat, and assume something is broken with your account. Nothing is broken. This is the normal rhythm of the burner, and everyone deals with it. The feed shows you what you have engaged with, so once you have engaged with a set of products, it will keep recycling them at you for a while.

You do not need a new burner. Your burner is not "cooked." If you feel like the same products are stuck on loop, the move is to retrain the feed, not throw it out. Go back to the search bar, search the same proven phrases you used to build it, engage hard with five or ten fresh products you have not seen before, and the feed will refresh. You can do this any time the feed feels stale.

A few specific moves to keep it fresh

Stop engaging with what you have already seen

Re-watching or liking products you have already followed just deepens the loop. Steer away from them.

Cut off repeat offenders

If one specific account keeps appearing, hit "not interested" on its videos or block the account. If a particular item like a generic humidifier shows up repeatedly, stop watching those completely.

Stay disciplined on session length

Your burner is a mirror of what you give it attention with, so steer it deliberately. A four-hour grind on one platform is exactly how you cook the feed in the first place.

imarketing.courses

"The whole point of doing this every day is that the day a real product appears, you are scrolling and ready to catch it."

You will not find a banger every day. Most days you scroll and nothing new jumps out. That is the job, not a sign you are failing. Treat it as routine, not as a daily lottery you are losing.