imarketing.courses

CONTENTSYSTEM.AI

MODULE 5.3

Product Archetypes

Different kinds of products behave very differently. There are three archetypes, each doing a specific thing, and the strongest products carry all three at once.

imarketing.courses

MODULE 5.3

Product Archetypes

No matter how you find products, you need a way to understand what kind of product you are looking at, because different kinds behave very differently. There are three product archetypes, and they each do a specific thing.

Wow = virality

A wow factor product is something striking that people have not seen before. Wow products are easy to go viral with, because the spectacle alone gets people to stop and watch. But going viral and converting are not the same thing, which is why wow alone is not enough.

Value = longevity

A value product solves a real problem or provides real ongoing usefulness. Value products convert at a higher rate and they last, because people actually have a reason to buy and keep buying. They tend to have a higher conversion rate from views to sessions and from sessions to sales. This is the kind of product that keeps making money instead of dying after a short run.

Niche = volatility

A niche product is aimed at a specific passionate group. Niche gives you better targeting and a higher conversion rate within that group, but on its own it is volatile. You can make money, but it tends to spike and drop rather than hold steady.

The goal: all three at once

The goal is to find a product that has all three at once. When a product hits all three, the wow factor makes it go viral, the value makes it convert and last, and the niche makes your targeting sharp.

imarketing.courses

THE SIX-FIGURE COMBINATION

Wow + Value + Niche

Products that have done six figures in a month tend to have all three of these qualities together. Not one, not two, but all three.

When you evaluate a product, figure out which of these it has, and understand that the strongest products are the ones where all three line up.