imarketing.courses

CONTENTSYSTEM.AI

MODULE 9.2

The Backend: Squeezing Every Sale

Most organic operators stop at the sale and leave a large amount of money on the table. The backend is what separates people who post and hope from people who think like real marketers.

imarketing.courses

MODULE 9.2

The Backend: Squeezing Every Sale

Most organic operators stop at the sale and leave a large amount of money on the table. The people who think like real marketers build a backend, the systems that capture buyers and near-buyers and keep selling to them after the video. This is where you separate yourself from people just posting and hoping.

SYSTEM ONE · THE BIG ONE

Comment-to-DM automation.

Using a tool like ManyChat, you set it up so that when someone comments a specific keyword on your video, they automatically get sent a direct message with the link to buy. You then invite the comment in your content and caption: comment a keyword and you will send them the link.

THIS DOES TWO THINGS AT ONCE

It converts the people asking how to buy by handing them the link instantly and automatically, at scale, without you replying to thousands of comments by hand. And it farms engagement, because all those keyword comments push the video harder in the algorithm, which gets you even more reach. It is a conversion tool and a virality tool in one.

SYSTEM TWO

Email and SMS flows.

When people buy, and when people start to buy and do not finish, you capture their contact info and follow up automatically.

Abandoned-checkout flow: messages the people who got close but did not complete, and recovers a meaningful chunk of them.

Post-purchase flows: go back to existing buyers to sell them again, which is far cheaper than finding a brand-new customer.

These automated flows run in the background and keep making money off attention you already paid nothing for.

imarketing.courses

SYSTEM THREE

Retargeting your following.

The accounts and audiences you have built are an asset you can sell to repeatedly. A following you have grown is a warm audience you can put new products and offers in front of, rather than starting from cold attention every time.

The viral wave brought people in. The backend is how you keep earning from them long after the wave passes.

THE MINDSET

Organic gets you the attention for free, but most people waste most of that attention by having no system to catch it. Build the machine, the ready store, the converting website, the comment automation, the follow-up flows, and you convert far more of every viral moment into actual money.

"The attention is only worth what your system can capture."