Posting Strategy

Let me say something honestly.

Most of the things people obsess over when posting… don't matter.

I know this from experience.

Not theory.
Not X threads.
Not YouTube "gurus".

The Myth of "Perfect Conditions"

People love to search for reasons why their video didn't perform.

"It was the wrong hour."
"It was the wrong hashtag."
"I should've posted on Tuesday."
"The algorithm hates me."

It feels better to blame external factors.

But in reality?

Most of that has very little impact.

What Actually Matters

If your video is strong enough to go viral, it will go viral.

It doesn't matter:

- What exact hour you post it
- Whether you used 0, 3 or 10 hashtags
- Whether you posted at 3 PM or 8 PM
- Whether you wrote a "perfect" description

Algorithms are designed to test content.

If it hooks people and keeps them watching, it spreads.

If it doesn't, it doesn't.

Simple.

Does Timing Matter At All?

Timing can have a slight influence on the initial test audience.

But it does not determine virality.

I've had videos posted at random hours go massive.
I've had perfectly timed uploads flop.

There is no magic time.

Consistency > timing.

Hashtags?

In this niche especially, hashtags are not the deciding factor.

They can help categorize content slightly, but they do not create virality.

If a video is strong, it will spread beyond hashtags.

Focus on:

- Hook
- Script
- Visual pacing
- Retention

The Real Strategy

Instead of obsessing over:

- Best hour
- Best hashtag
- Best day

Focus on:

- Posting consistently
- Improving each video
- Studying what actually performed

Because here’s the truth:

Sometimes a good video flops.
Sometimes a weaker one explodes.

That’s part of the game.

But over time, quality compounds.

If your video is good enough to win,
the algorithm will find the audience.

Your job is to make it good enough.

Not to overthink the post button.