Titles, Posting Time & Hashtags

Most creators overthink this part.

It’s not where virality is decided.

Titles

Your title can simply be very similar to your hook.

In most cases, I keep it very close to the hook.

It can be:

- Identical
- Slightly shortened
- Slightly reworded

It truly does not make or break the video.

Posting Time

I’ll be honest.

I post terribly.

Completely random times.
No schedule.
No consistency in hour.

And it has not stopped videos from going viral.

Posting time does not determine whether a short becomes big.

If you want structure for yourself, you can choose something logical, for example:

- Evening hours for US audiences

But this is more about your discipline - not algorithm magic.

Long-term, posting time does not decide your video’s success.

Hashtags

In this niche, very few creators use hashtags.

And if they do, it’s usually something simple like:

#skeleton
#whatif
#3danimation

You do not need hashtags.

But if you want to use them:

- Use relevant ones
- Keep it minimal
- Maximum 3

More hashtags do not increase reach.

About “Weird” Hashtag Methods

If you know about certain “special hashtag strategies” on YouTube - this part is for you.

Don’t use them.

Best case scenario:
You attract the wrong audience (for example, traffic from regions that don’t align with your monetization strategy).

Worst case scenario:
You risk hurting your channel.

If your goal is to push US audience and increase RPM, use normal, relevant hashtags.

Don’t try to hack the system.
