1. Creating YouTube Channel

Setting up a YouTube channel for this niche is very simple.

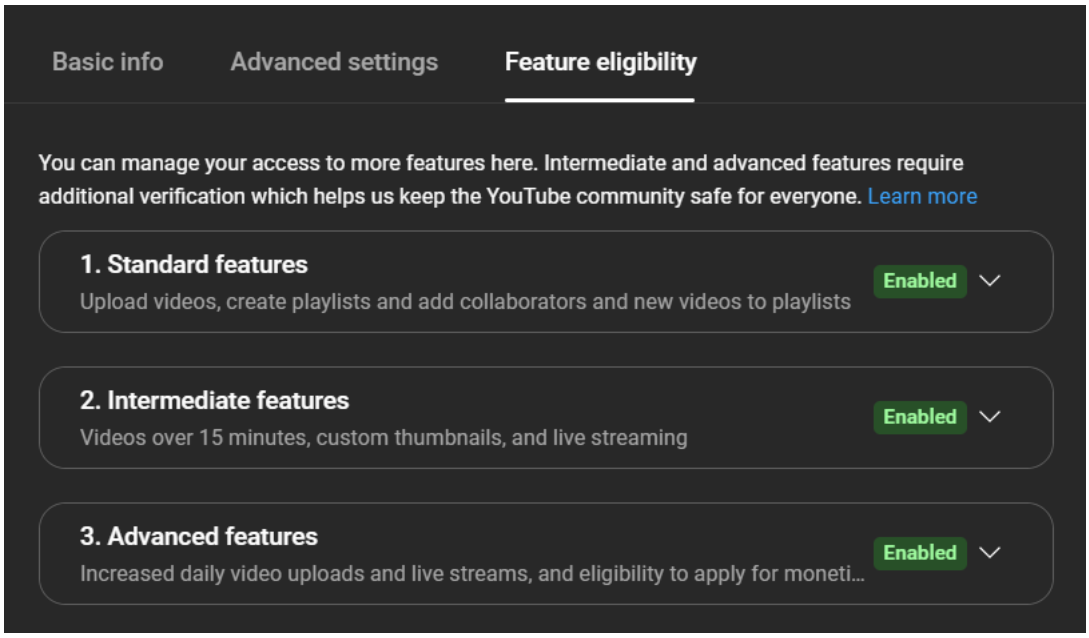

I've used this exact setup structure multiple times and it has never failed me.

You don't need anything complicated. You don't need advanced SEO tricks. You don't need secret settings.

You just need to do it properly and not rush it.

Steps to Create and Warm Up a YouTube Channel to Avoid 0 Views on Shorts:

1. Create a New Channel:
    - Use a Gmail account that is at least 2 weeks old and is connected to some popular websites (if you already have one, this is the best option). If you don't have older Gmail accounts, just create a new one, log in to some popular websites and create a channel 1-2 days later.
    - Set up the channel on this Gmail account.
2. Complete Verification:
    - Fully verify the channel (3-step feature eligibility in Settings, screenshot below):

3. Set Up the Channel Properly:
    - Go to the settings and configure everything:
        - Set the country.

        - Adjust advanced settings (channel category, language).
        - Add relevant keywords (more below)
    - In the "Customization" tab upload a banner, profile picture and write a channel description (more below).

4. Let the Channel Rest:
    - After setting everything up, leave the channel alone for 2-3 days.
    - During this time, casually browse Shorts and regular long videos like a normal user.

5. Upload Your First Short.
    - After 2-3 days, upload your first Short.

One Email = One Channel

This is important.

Use one email per channel.

If a channel gets terminated for any reason, YouTube can terminate every channel under that same email account. Don’t risk losing multiple channels.

Treat each channel as its own asset.

Separate email. Separate risk.

Basic Channel Setup

After creating the channel, you’ll set up:

- Channel name
- Description
- Profile picture
- Banner

Let me be clear:

None of these settings will magically make you go viral.

They don’t directly affect views in a meaningful way.

But they do affect how legitimate you look.

And legitimacy matters.

If someone lands on your channel and it looks messy, inconsistent or obviously AI-generated in a bad way, they're less likely to subscribe.

If you don't have ideas:

- Use AI to generate name suggestions
- Use AI to help write a short, clean description
- For profile pictures: Ideogram, ChatGPT image generation, Canva
- For banners: Canva, Nano Banana or any tool you're comfortable with

Just avoid images that scream "cheap AI".

Best advice? Study the biggest channels in your niche.
Notice how simple most of them actually are.

Important Settings

Inside YouTube Studio settings:

- Set your channel language to English (if you're targeting English audience)
- Mark your content as Not made for kids (this is very important)
- Add channel keywords

Channel keywords don't have huge impact, but add relevant ones anyway.

Examples:

- what if
- 3d animation
- educational shorts
- explainer videos
- biology facts
- history facts
- AI storytelling
- knowledge
- facts

Channel category?

I use Entertainment.
It doesn't really matter.

And that's the key point:

Most of these settings don't matter because of what you choose.

They matter because you're making your channel look less like a bot and more like a real brand.

That reduces friction.

When to Post the First Video

After preparing and warming up the channel for a few days, you can publish your first video.

Don't rush it on day one.

You're building infrastructure. Treat it seriously.

Once everything looks clean, natural and active, then you start.

And from there, consistency matters more than anything else.
