TikTok Setup

TikTok is a different game.

Compared to YouTube it’s much easier to trigger weird suppression, low distribution or what people casually call a “shadowban”. Whether that term is fully accurate or not doesn’t matter, what matters is this:

TikTok reacts very strongly to account behavior.

Because of that, warming up your account here is more important than on YouTube.

This becomes even more relevant if you’re living in a region where TikTok monetization isn’t available and you’re structuring your setup accordingly (we’ll cover monetization in the final section of this blueprint).

Creating the Account

First step:

Create the account and verify your email in account's settings.

Do not immediately rush to fully brand it.

On TikTok, aggressive setup behavior right after account creation can sometimes trigger friction. It’s better to behave naturally.

Warming Up Properly

Before setting up the profile, spend time using the app like a real user.

Scroll your For You Page.
Engage normally.
Watch content in your niche.

Ideally, scroll at least 30 minutes per day.

Like videos.
Leave normal comments.
Save content.

This also gives you something valuable:
You start seeing what’s actually going viral in your niche.

That alone is worth the time.

One common beginner mistake is following dozens of accounts immediately after creating a profile. Don’t do that.

Let the account behave like a real human profile.

Profile Setup (Day 2+)

On the second day (or after some natural activity), you can set:

- Profile picture
- Username
- Bio

Keep it simple and clean, same as YouTube.

Again, this isn't about tricking the algorithm. It's about reducing signals that look automated or mass-created.

TikTok is extremely behavior-sensitive.

Posting Your First Video

After several days of warming up and basic preparation, you can post your first video.

Here's a practical benchmark:

A healthy new account should usually reach around 100–200 views within the first 1–2 hours.

If it doesn't:

Don't panic immediately.

First:

- Try posting another video.
- Avoid deleting anything.
- Let the system collect data.

Important: Do not delete videos at the start. If you need to delete something later, use privacy settings instead of deleting.

If multiple videos consistently struggle to break early distribution after several attempts, then it may be more efficient to restart clean rather than fight a restricted account.

Time is your most valuable asset.

If the foundation is unstable, rebuild it early.
